Microsoft continues to steal and copy other companies ideas, put little guys out of business by any means possible, while at the same time, and because of their large market share deliver mediocre products with no real innovation.

Apple continues to be one of the few companies to create quality products, with truly innovative ideas that Microsoft simply copies after apple has done all the work.

Now, Microsoft want to force the schools to use their cheap, expensive to maintain computers which end up costing more in training and repair than Macs.

Who the Hell is Microsoft paying off to get away with their blatant robbery.

Viruses, the Y2K nightmare, are just not an issue on a Mac. Can't someone see what is going on here.

Are you just going to sit by and let them continue to get away with it?

What does it take for you guys to wake up?

Windows XP is a JOKE! Want to see a really modern operating system?

Here you go:

Windows XP takes over your machine like a virus. It converts your files so that you can not go back to using them unless you use Microsoft products. It converts your MP3 music with Media Player so that they will then only play on Microsoft software.

How about making Microsoft donate $100 million to the schools that they can use to purchase any computer they want. If you do that, they will buy what they really want. Want to see real innovation? Check out what Microsoft will be copying next:

What is it going to take for you people you see what is going on?
